THE RISE OF THE FREELANCER ECONOMY

BY Brian Rashid, CONTRIBUTOR

I feel bad for college graduates.

They pay hundreds of thousands of dollars for an education and a piece of paper. They send their resume to dozens of companies and wait for a reply. Then they wait some more. They continue waiting, waiting, and waiting. As they wait, their debt does not go away. Their living expenses don't suddenly stop until someone offers a job. Stress levels rise. Self-confidence falls. As if that is not bad enough, there is a bigger problem with waiting.

The act of waiting leads to reactive professional growth. In other words, your skill set building does not start until you get the job.

It hopes to prevent: "unconscious bias" and tap a more diverse "talent pool".
